

10 More Truths about International Taxation

Steve Dean and Attiya Warris

Abstract

The future of global tax policy looks bright. Or bleak. It all depends on where you sit. For those with power and influence, such as Ireland, modest concessions have cleared a path towards continued prosperity. For those without, like Burundi, irrelevance seems a forgone conclusion.

We still disagree on a host of key issues, but find common ground on 10 more Truths. They put international tax policy in context. To explain the differing fortunes of Burundi and Ireland, 10 More Truths looks to intellectual property and trade law. It considers the implications of “Dutch disease” and what it tells us about the prospects for truly inclusive global tax policy.
